Considering the ract, however, that neither Considering the ract, also were, that neither Capt. Parsell nor any of his officers, nor, in ract, any one else aboard ship knew that the young men were contemplating any desperate deed, it is barely possible that a meeting might have been arranged without letting any one else into the secret. It is not improbable either that Mr. Drayton may have taken the law into his own hands and settled Mr. Borrowe's case for him in the way he threatened before he left Rigiand.

Some people take the desperate view of the case that unless both belligorents have been inid up with seastickness during the whole voyage not hing could possibly prevent the shedding of blood. Others say that nothing of the kind is feared. They imply that Mr. Drayton had really no intention of doing as be said when he threatened that he would shoot Mr. Borrowe at sight; and are willing to wager that when he met that young man aboard the Majestic he simply ignored him. They say also that Drayton is "too much of a gentleman to give his enemy the satisfaction of knowing that he regards him as anything more than a sneak and a coward." When he gets back here he will be expected to brand Mr. Borrowe as such a person, just as he promised to do before leaving London.

It is said that Mrs. Coleman Drayton has been put under restraint by her parents. Her children have been taken from her and she will accept that she is insane and say that the taint is a heroditary one. A late report from London is to the effect that Mrs. Drayton has gone to join her parents in Algiers. She has left her London longdings and departed for the Continent.

Corbett's combination is filling an engagenian puts on the gloves at every performance with Jim Daly. Just before the matinee began yesterday Mitchell. Heavy-weight F. Patsey Slavin and Bill and Jack Slavin, twin brothers of F. Patsey, appeared at the boxoffice and tried to jolly Manager Moore what Mr. Moore didn't propose to building of a raction for two excellent reasons. First, all the park.

Sprinter Chawley, F. Patsey and the twin Slavins were promptly on hand to have a bloomn' bit of a muss.

Corbett sauntered into the theatre lobby and couldn't help meeting Mitchell. Additional potations in plentitude had given Mitchell an elaborate quantity of Dutch courage, and he strutted up to Corbett retained his dignity and composure and pushed the sprinter from Ablon's shores away, saving he wished to avoid a row with a drunken man. Then he went into the theatre.

Mitchell bought seats for himself and party and followed the Californian. Inside the auditorium Mitchell renewed his beligerent talk with Corbett, and he was so boisterous that the entire audience was quickly awar of the with corbett, and he was so boisterous that the entire audience was quickly aware of the state of affairs. The spectators were with Corbett almost to a man, and they repeatedly requested James J. to "punch Chawley off the planet." Mitchell provoked Corbett until torbearance cessed to be a virtue.

Manager Moore had sent in a call for police assistance and the performance on the stage was entirely neglected for the feverish reacontre in the auditorium.

was entirely begiected for the feverish reacontre in the auditorium.

The crowd pressed the puglists back into the lobby again, where Corbett, unable to control himself longer, sprang at/Mitchell, alming a vicious blow at his termentor, which did not land. The latter turned on his heel instantly and fled like a deer up the Bowery. At no time did F. Patsey Slavin take any part in the encounter. That may be explained by the fact that Mitchell had abused him roundly while the party was playing pool at the Hoffman House earlier in the day. The pair got into a wordy battle, and were prevented from coming to blows by Billy Edwards.

Mitchell's grievance against Corbett is that the latter has spoiled his chances of getting on a fight with Sullivan.
